Bellwork

What is the difference between solute and solvent?

Which is in the greatest quantity?

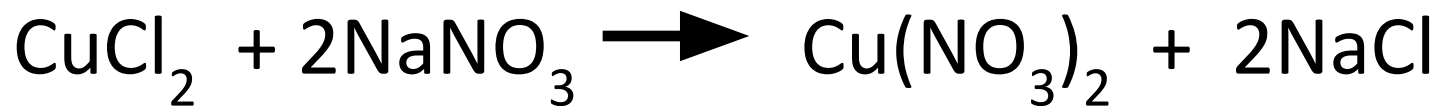

List several solution examples identifying the solute and solvent (challenge: include one non-liquid solution example)

Complete equation, balance, and identify the precipitate on #3:

Warmup

1) Find the concentration of each:

a) 2.0g of FeCl_2 in 500mL water. (m)

b) 3.0g of sand mixed with 0.50kg of salt. (% m/m) - same units

c) 2.0 mL of acetic acid in 1.5L water. (% v/v) - same units

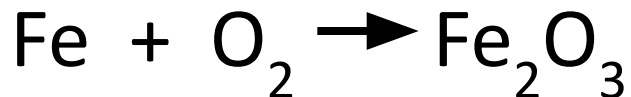

d) 2.5g of sugar in 1 L milk. (% m/v) - convert to mL

e) 0.030g in 10. L of water (ppm)

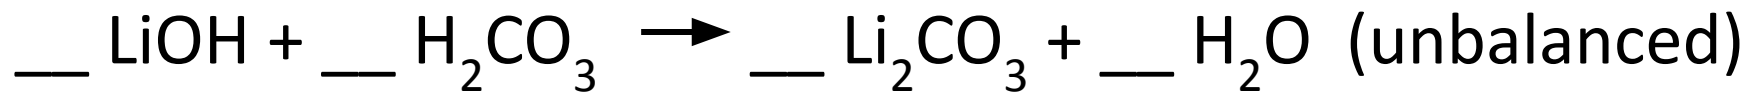

2) Draw a diagram of how water molecules would surround CH_4 vs. CH_3OH vs. HCl .

3) Describe how you would make 2.0 L of a 3.0 M solution of NaCl .

- 7) Write and balance the equation above.
- 8) If 16.4 g Fe react with excess oxygen, how many grams of iron (III) oxide should be produced?
- 9) If, at the end of the experiment, 15.7 grams of iron (III) oxide were actually produced, what is the percent yield?

12) Balance the chemical equation above. Then determine how many moles of LiOH are required to react with 20.0 mol H₂CO₃?
